UGANDANS MUST START SERIOUS CAMPAIGN AGAINST DEFORESTATION

For many years, Uganda has faced various problems while some have been solved, others have continued to exist. Some of those that still exist is deforestation.

Deforestation has affected Uganda’s climate and in the near future, I believe the situation will worsen unless both the government and the citizens seriously address the problem. The government cannot fight the problem alone. For example, very many trees are being cut down no one seems to be bothered. Local councils in the villages should sensitize the citizens to fight deforestation.

The reforestation campaign should be promoted in both primary and secondary schools. The government should encourage planting of trees by students around their schools. It is very easy for a student to take care of a tree or trees he has planted. The trend has already started in some schools. Students were given trees which they planted around the compound under the supervision of teachers. They were advised to take care of these trees including the one’s they never planted. It is cheaper to promote reforestation in schools.

Secondly, people should be told the effects of deforestation. This should be done in local languages and not English because many Ugandans are illiterate and are the one's responsible for deforestation. All Ugandans have a duty to protect the environment.
